

The European Hare

in the north of Ireland and its impact on the Irish hare

Wednesday 4 September 2013

7pm Toome House, Toomebridge

Anthony Hallam, a PhD research student from Queen's University Belfast, will deliver a talk on the unique status of the Irish hare and on the issue of introduced European hares to Ireland. He will be describing the work he has conducted thus far and where his project will lead in the coming months..

The Irish Hare

South Derry is one of the areas where both species overlap. Hybridisation may occur throughout Mid-Ulster and Anthony is surveying this area as part of his PhD research. He will tell us how to identify the two species and how to assist in his research if you come across hares in the area.

We encourage anyone who is interested in local biodiversity to attend. The event is FREE OF CHARGE, but places may be limited.
